Keep up with the latest daily buzz with the BuzzFeed Daily newsletter! When you handle deadly snakes for a living, caution is job one. When you handle snakes for God, it is not. Let's meet some folks in both worlds. By Julia Layton The coding of this project consists of 2 parts. In the first part we need to make sure that we can actually use the ledmatrix. I did not do this myself since this is some next level coding and I'm just an intermediate at best. If you want to play around with this, Instructable and arduino have some amazing tutorials on how to do this. I used this ones coding for the basis of my snake-game: following this tutorial, you can stop right into making your snake game. If you don't want to wright all the codes yourself, you can download mine above. Just make sure your pins are set on the right ones. Here is a small tutorial on how to create the code:I first copied the code MakeSpace_LEDMatrix from the tutorial. If you downloaded the zip-file from the tutorial you can find it in the examples. I removed all coding that drew something on the matrix because we're going to do that ourselves.You can make a few variables:- x and y position for the food.- an array of x and y postions for the snake's body.- a direction variable- a snake length variable- a score variable (you could make this dependent on the length)- a pause booleanIn the setup, start with drawing the food and the snake to the matrix and add a delay. Then go to the loop. First make sure the loop only runs when the game isn't paused and unpause the game whenever the joystick is pressed (SW-pin/pin-2). Make sure the snake's body follows the head by replacing the x and y position of the last bodypart by the x and y position of the bodypart that comes next. This can be easily done by using a for-loop. Now you can make the head move towards the direction its going. When that's done, change the direction of the snake's head whenever the joystick is pressed in the concerning direction. Keep in mind that you don't have to be able to change the direction into the direction it's already going and the snake can't make a U-turn. Now make sure that whenever the snake leaves the matrix (-1 or 8) it returns on the other side of the matrix instead. Do this on both the x and y axis. Whenever the snake's head reaches the coordinates of the food, add 1 to the length of the snake (which should spawn another bodypart) and give the food a new, random position on the matrix. At the end of the loop, draw the snake parts to the matrix and set a delay.Finally we want to make a gameover screen. In your loop, make a for-loop which checks for every bodypart if it collides with the head. When it does, make it enter a new void called something like GameOver. Here you can write gameover to the matrix using the codes given in the matrix-tutorial, then you can draw the score and after that reset the game. Keep in mind that resetting the game will be achieved when you reset all starter variables.
